But, fortunately for the grandeur of this Commonwealth, the members of the Legislature are but shadows, passing over and darkening the face of the mirror. The substance that reflects those shadows is in the country, the people, the great court of appeals, before whom all causes of moment may be carried.

The friends and faithful advocates of the commercial independence of Virginia, having failed to rouse the torpor of the Legislature, have at length carried the question before the august tribunal of the people, have appealed from the steward to his lord, from the careless and inattentive servant, to his master. The game is up, the hunters are in the field, and those who refuse to take part in the hunt, will not be admitted to the public tables.
